

The Potter County Education Council has a number of ways to assist students in reaching their goals, whether those goals involve attaining a college degree or passing the GED.

The PLATO computerized learning system assists students with remedial academic work from a very basic level (i.e. addition/subtraction) to an advanced level (i.e. calculus) in a variety of subjects that include: reading, language, math, science, social studies, writing and basic business skills.

The Princeton Review (TPR) is a college preparation tool. TPR allows the student to search for potential careers, courses of study and colleges by entering their own individual criteria. Among the features that TPR offers are test-taking tips, career analysis, college, major and scholarship searches, a calendar to track your progress, and more.
